REGENERATE. Global forum reSITE 2019 calls to action for happiness and sustainability

Fresh off of getting the top award for Best Self-Produced Event of 2018, reSITE announces the theme for its upcoming world-class forum: REGENERATE. reSITE's global community of thought leaders, urbanists and most innovative urban and business leaders from all parts of the planet will get together at Prague's Forum Karlin on September 19–20, 2019. reSITE 2019, called by The Atlantic Citylab "the most important conversation of our time," will present 50 international speakers surrounded by a 1000+ audience. reSITE will share collective ideas, collaborative actions and design solutions within new event formats – intensive round tables, networking breakfasts and a big party. The latter will be included in the new type of entry for general public. The event will be curated by Greg Lindsay. A limited capacity of 2-for-1 registrations are open now.

"reSITE has assembled a global community acting to improve our livelihood in cities that we love in and live in, with a simple message: Each one of you have the creativity, resourcefulness and power to make this world a better place whether it be addressing climate change, sustainable growth or civic architecture.

Thus our theme REGENERATE is a call to action. We will offer solutions to help cities redefine their resources for the changing needs of our cities especially for younger urban dwellers who care about climate change and a high happiness factor,” says reSITE’s Chairman Martin Barry in his invitation to join the event. “We are the leaders who brought you the now internationally heralded Manifesto Market. We have proven with our own projects how fast we can create a tangible impact on many levels, how to regenerate a neighborhood and redefine a whole industry.”

“REGENERATE explores both the rebirth of cities and the generations of people living within,” explains Greg Lindsay, author, urbanist and reSITE’s Guest Curator. How will we make room for families by remaking the city at every scale — from the mega-redevelopment of brownfields to restoring neighborhoods? How should we balance expansion with heritage? How are today’s mayors grappling with unaffordability and redevelopment? Which startups are transforming the city itself into a generator to stave off climate change? And which architects are imagining new ways of living, working and playing for children and families? REGENERATE will bring together a new generation of leaders on climate, energy, health, and mobility — as well as design and public policy — to discuss creating cities for young and old alike.

Registrations open with heavy discounts for students and Women in Design

Now is the best time to register with a discounted rate, 2-for-1 offer is available until May 15th. To encourage all the female architects, designers, women in real estate development and municipal leadership, a special “Women in Design” discounted ticket is available.

The entry will be traditionally subsidized for full-time students. The organizers introduce a brand new ticket category, “Limited Ticket”, making several program elements of reSITE accessible to the general audience including access to the Live Mic Stage, annual party, food and chill zone and more.

New to the format this year will be afternoon breakout sessions on both days, where business leaders and industry professionals will share ideas and address the most pressing issues about regenerating our cities. The afternoon sessions will be complemented with an exhibition of new large development sites in Prague that seek to regenerate the city, and will be supported by discussions about these development areas. Shared Cities: Creative Momentum will present several outcomes of the 4-year EU-funded project.
